Max. Total Credits: This should be equal to the number of credits for courses that cannot be repeated for credit. For courses that may be repeated for credit, enter the maximum total number of credits a student can receive from this course. E.g., enter 6 credits for a 3 credit course that may be taken a second time for credit, but not for a third time. Please note that this does NOT refer to how many times a class may be retaken for a higher grade.

CURRENT CATALOG DESCRIPTION:

This course introduces students to the interdisciplinary methodological approaches, research practices, and conceptual frameworks of the field of American Studies. The course will examine the historical development of theories and methods in the field, and survey selected interdisciplinary methods and research practices. Students will engage in research and writing exercises designed to develop practical research skills and the ability to apply a range of methods and concepts to the study of American society and culture.

PROPOSED CATALOG DESCRIPTION (Approximately 75 words in length. Please use full sentences): leave blank if no changes are being proposed to the catalog description. NOTE: information about prerequisites should NOT appear in the catalog description.)

This course introduces students to theories and methods in the field of American studies. Readings focus on methodological approaches and research practices employed both inside academia and in public scholarship. Students will write original research proposals that focus on problem solving. Students are expected to use what they learn in applying approaches in American studies to a specific problem/social issue and developing an original research proposal for a research paper or a public facing project.

RATIONALE FOR CHANGE:

For the past three years the Department of American Studies has successfully opened AMST 300 to students outside of the majors. This has been in support of interdisciplinary inquiry and original student research across the programs/departments in CAHSS. AMST 300 also counts towards the department’s new minor in Asian American Studies and the proposal for the new collaborative minor in public humanities. In addition, AMST approved project-based public humanities projects as fulfilling our senior seminar research capstone (AMST 490). This was in direct response to the diverse job and graduate school interests of our students that move beyond the traditional 25-page research paper capstone during our last APR (2016). Our students have completed project such as such as exhibitions, walking tours, public dialogues, and various multimedia projects (accompanied by a brief 10-page paper contextualizing the work and its significance). Revising the AMST research core (AMST 300, which included a literature review and proposal for an original research project, and AMST 490, where students complete the research project) makes sure that all of our students complete original research and use the skills of critical analysis and synthesis while completing the major in American Studies as well as opening this option to our various minors (American Studies, Asian American Studies, and public humanities). Since we have opened the course to non-majors, we have had students majoring in Psychology, English, Global Studies, Economics, Statistics, Media & Communications, and Interdisciplinary Studies take the course.

Course Description:
This course introduces students to theories and methods in the field of American studies. Readings focus on methodological approaches and research practices employed both inside academia and in public scholarship—such as exhibitions, walking tours, public dialogues, and multimedia projects. We will engage with specific research practices such as the critical analysis of primary and secondary sources, conducting library and archival research, formulating method statements, literature reviews, and writing original research proposals that focus on problem solving. Throughout the course, students develop an understanding of the many ways the humanities both analyze and influence culture. Students are expected to use what they learn in applying approaches in American studies to a specific problem/social issue and developing an original research proposal for a research paper or a public facing project.

AMST 300 is a reading and writing intensive (WI) course. The proposal you create in AMST 300 can be your research project for AMST 490: Senior Seminar and/or can be part of your Asian American studies or public humanities minor.

Learning Outcomes:
By the end of the semester, student will be able to…
- Develop an academic vocabulary necessary to critically analyze cultural issues
- Examine a variety of approaches to critical analysis & cultivate the knowledge needed to identify research questions, sources, methodologies, and theories of scholarly writing in American studies and publically engaged scholarship
- Develop library and archival research skills (in both primary and secondary sources)
- Master the skills of research and critical analysis in the process of developing an original research proposal
- Think about how to plan and implement public projects
- This is a Writing Intensive (WI) course. We focus on the importance of revision to becoming a better writer and communicator.

Texts:

Course Assessment:

Scale: 1 – 100 point scale for each assignment. A = 90-100, B = 80-89, C = 70-79, D = 60 – 69, F = 59 and below. Specific requirements and assessment rubrics for each assignment will be provided.

Essentially, my grading philosophy is if you follow all the guidelines and correctly complete each aspect of the paper assignment you earn a C. To earn a B you must show an especially good (beyond average) grasp of the concepts and an original application. To earn an A your work should express a strong critical understand of the issues in the class. Each assignment will have its own individual assessment rubric focused on building critical analysis and writing skills.

Small Assignments/Student Blogs: 25%

Student will keep a public blog reflecting on the course concepts and their own research interests. There will be numerous small assignments throughout the semester. For example, students will sign up to analyze two readings in the first half of the semester. Also, students will attend and reflect on a public research presentations at UMBC or the greater Baltimore area.

Class Participation/Attendance: 25%

Attending class on time, reading the assignments, and participating in discussions are essential to your grade and your success in the course. There may also be pop quizzes and small writing assignments assessing critical reading skills. Missing more than three classes will lower your grade by 10 points. Lateness is unacceptable. (2 times late = 1 absence) Students are responsible for materials they miss due to an absence (excused or unexcused) – check Blackboard. If you miss class, do not email me asking if you missed anything. You get three days absent without any explanation necessary. You must come see me in my office (in person) to discuss excessive absences. Email is not appropriate.

Excused Absences: Beyond the three missed classes, excused absences will be based on university guidelines. Please see the student handbook for more information see the website and the student handbook: https://registrar.umbc.edu/services/registration/Information-About-Withdrawal-and-Absence/

Proposal Prep: 25% You will draft your research proposal in small pieces during the first part of the semester and then revise and edit the pieces together for the final version. Peer editing and writing/revision groups will be central to your writing process… writing is primarily revision.

Final Research Proposals: 25%

You will come up with an original research proposal idea that you will work on throughout the second half of the semester. Our two final weeks of class will entail peer editing and then presentation of the research proposals to the pubic.

CLASS GUIDELINES:

Blackboard:
Students are required to use Blackboard to keep up with the class schedule, announcements, discussion boards, and other ongoing aspects of the course. We will also use google docs for editing writing.

Writing Guidelines:
All assignments must be thoroughly proofread and professionally written. If you are not a strong writer, VISIT THE WRITING CENTER. See information: http://www.umbc.edu/lrc/writing_center.htm

Technology:
No cell phones should ring or be used for text messaging in this classroom. Infractions = poem on the class topic due next class (at least 8 lines and read aloud during the next class). If students want to use a laptop to take notes during class, they must talk to me beforehand. This is a humanities course… we will use class time to engage with the other humans in the room : )

Academic Integrity:
By enrolling in this course, each student assumes the responsibilities of an active participant in UMBC's scholarly community in which everyone's academic work and behaviour are held to the highest standards of honesty. Cheating, fabrication, plagiarism, and helping others to commit these acts are all forms of academic dishonesty, and they are wrong. Academic misconduct could result in disciplinary action that may include, but is not limited to, suspension or dismissal. To read the full Student Academic Conduct Policy, consult the UMBC Student Handbook, the Faculty Handbook, or the UMBC Policies section of the UMBC Directory. I have a zero tolerance policy for academic dishonesty of any kind.

Respect:
Students will respect the viewpoints of others and present their own viewpoints in a respectful fashion. Neither rudeness nor disrespect will be tolerated. Talking, texting, checking email, etc. when another student or the professor is talking will not be tolerated. The values of inclusion and equity are essential to the field of American studies, UMBC, and this course.

UMBC's Preferred Name/Changing Preferred Name Policy
UMBC recognizes that any student, faculty, or staff member may choose to identify themselves within the University community with a preferred first name that differs from their legal (primary) name. As long as the use of a preferred name is not for the purpose of misrepresentation, the University acknowledges that a preferred name should be used whenever possible in the course of university business and education. If you would like UMBC to use a preferred name that is different from your legal (primary) name (for example, Bob instead of Robert), you can easily do so on your myUMBC profile page. Note that this will only affect internal university processes, like the Campus Card, class roster or Blackboard, and will not change your legal (primary) name with the University, where the use of the legal (primary) name necessitated by University business or legal requirement.

Special Needs:
If you have any special needs (learning disabilities, physical accommodations, language needs, etc.), please let me know as soon as possible so we can work together to meet those needs. I will respect your privacy and work with you in any way I can to build a good learning environment for all students.
Religious Observations:
Students will not be penalized for missing class due to religious observances and these absences count as excused; however, I should be notified in advance.
