CURRENT CATALOG DESCRIPTION:

EDUC 306 - Lifespan Human Development

(3.00)

An introduction to human development through the lifespan. The course is designed specifically for nursing students and covers theoretical perspectives and empirical research on development from the prenatal period through senescence, with consideration of practical implications. Issues in physical, social, cognitive and affective development are examined.

This course may be subject to a Course Materials Charge. The charge may vary by semester, depending on the course materials required. The Course Materials Initiative (CMI) was established to provide students with more affordable course materials, enhance the students’ experience on a common digital platform via Blackboard, and position UMBC to be ahead of the curve with digital content. More information is available at UMBC Bookstore’s website.

Hi - We are updating our Education course descriptions for the undergraduate catalog and noticed that PSYC 306 is co-listed as EDUC 306. Our department has had no involvement in the course in recent years and I am unaware of the rationale for this co-listing and/or the implications of withdrawal of the co-listing. We welcome your feedback about if it is worth maintaining this co-listing.

We would like to submit our proposal for changes to the course descriptions in mid January and look forward to your response. Below are the current course descriptions for both PSYC 306 and EDUC 306

I am happy to talk about this in person or via phone if that would be helpful.

Best, Linda Oliva

Hi Linda:

I traced the origin of this, and it was a request on behalf of pre-nursing students to both departments to offer the course. Given that EDUC doesn't offer it, there is no reason to maintain the cross list.

Chris, I am very sorry I did not respond to you earlier. This response was stuck in my draft folders. Thanks so much for getting back to me about this co-listed course. We will move forward with removing it from our catalog and ending the co-listing. Hope you have a great semester. Best, Linda
