Proposed Upper Division Certificate in Critical Sexuality Studies

a) Centrality of the proposed certificate program to the mission of the institution

The Gender, Women's, and Sexuality Studies (GWST) Department at UMBC proposes the development of an Undergraduate Certificate in Critical Sexuality Studies (CSST). Development of the CSST Certificate reflects movement both within and beyond GWST-related fields, which have drawn attention to sexuality and sexual identity as vectors of social inequity requiring critical academic focus. The goal of the new certificate is to provide comprehensive interdisciplinary training in the study of sexuality for students of all majors across UMBC. The certificate includes training in the breadth of topics and varied methodologies reflective of the field of sexuality studies. In particular, the certificate program requires a greater number of total credits and electives than the existing minor and provides for a more robust social science focus and greater understanding of the discursive/ideological grounds of social policy and public discourse about sexuality in all its forms. By training students to critically engage topics of human sexuality and developing literacy in issues pertaining specifically to LGBTQ+ individuals, the certificate prepares students for work within increasingly diverse workplaces and social communities. As such it is in line with university- and system- wide priorities of diversity, equity, and inclusion and the UMBC mission of inclusive excellence.

b) Evidence of the market demand for the proposed certificate program

Due to the recent growth in focus on diversity, equity, and inclusion within all institutions, and in particular the state, local, and educational mandate to better serve diverse constituencies, there is high demand for employees with training in sexuality studies and expertise with issues pertaining to sexually diverse populations. In particular, it is well documented that LGBTQ+ youth are overrepresented in foster care systems and are at greater risk of homelessness and suicide.¹ Furthermore, the CSST certificate has both an intersectional and transnational focus, meaning students will be provided with comprehensive background in studies of race, gender, and class in addition to sexuality. Comprehensive education in the field of Critical Sexuality Studies will provide our undergraduates with a competitive advantage in graduate school admissions and the post-graduation job market in fields including but not limited to social work, mental health services, education, and other nonprofit work and public service.²

The certificate will be open UMBC undergraduates of all majors and will be of particular interest to two specific groups of students: Majors in GWST and other related humanities fields such as English, History, and American Studies with a particular interest in the study of sexuality, and Majors in the social sciences including Psychology, Sociology, and Social Work whose academic interests and/or future career plans include attention to the category of sexuality and/or LGBTQ+ populations. Currently, students from these majors enroll in CSST-focused GWST courses in large numbers, often citing planned career trajectories that require a CSST background. The certificate program will offer a comprehensive and focused course of study to achieve those ends in a professionally legible way. GWST Affiliate faculty in these departments concur that they expect this certificate to be of great interest to their students. The nature and focus of the Certificate thus serve the goal of attracting students from outside of GWST and other humanities fields whose undergraduate coursework and future career goals would be complemented by expertise in the study of sexuality. As the only such certificate within the USM system, it also has potential to attract more students to UMBC.

c) Curriculum design

Student Learning Objectives

Students gain an understanding of the influence of sexuality in cultural discourse and on contemporary social organization and behavior.

Students gain an understanding of the diverse range of LGBTQ+ individuals' experiences and specific ways in which race, ethnicity, gender, nationality, class background and historical contexts shape these experiences.

Students develop a knowledge base of the contemporary scholarship of critical sexuality studies; how to assess the appropriateness of research methodologies for studying sexuality; and how to apply these strategies to their own projects.

Students gain critical thinking skills; learn to communicate about sexuality effectively in both oral and written communications; and learn to work well with persons of diverse backgrounds and opinions.

Students gain skills to recognize and understand the relationship between theory and practice as it relates to social and personal change, professional leadership, and social policy.

Certificate in Critical Sexuality Studies—21 Credits

Core Courses—9 Credits

CSST 210 Introduction to Critical Sexuality Studies
CSST 345 Unruly Bodies
CSST 485 Sexuality and Queer Theory

Electives—12 Credits

Complete 12 elective credits, of which at least 6 credits must be two of the following interdisciplinary social science courses; and up to 6 credits in arts and culture. With approval of their advisor, students may take up to 3 credits of independent study and up to 3 credits of internship towards completion of the 12 credits of electives. Selected topics courses (CSST 292, 392, 492) may also be counted toward the 12 credits in electives.

GWST 344	Transnational Femininities
GWST 348	Black, Queer, and Feminist Film
GWST/THTR 349	Gender, Sexuality, + Theatrical Performance

d) Evidence of adequate faculty resources for the proposed certificate program

No new resources are needed to support this program. The usual budgetary processes in CAHSS has been and will likely continue to be sufficient to provide the faculty resources needed to support the program. Like the current GWST major, minor, certificate, and CSST minor, faculty oversight of the new certificate curriculum will reside with the GWST department faculty in consultation with the GWST Coordinating Committee. More than 50% of the courses in the proposed new UDC will be taught by full-time faculty from the GWST Department of affiliated departments.
